

Sip Carefully: Plastic Straws and the Individualization of Responsibility
Kiara Goodwine

The article identifies three primary actors in environmental harm, individual consumers, corporations, and government. Who do you think is most responsible for environmental harm? Why? Who do you consider the least responsible?

Why might “imploing individuals to change their actions as consumers in order to better the environment” “reinforce existing inequalities”?

What does the phenomenon of “greenwashing” say about consumerism and sustainability?
