

Is the Global Citizenship Movement the New "White Man's Burden"?
Kiara Goodwine

Outline the different sides of the debate surrounding the global citizenship movement as presented by the author.

The author notes that globalization can seem like a "threat to local and national connections" in developed countries like the US and UK. How so? And how might developing countries feel this threat differently?

What is Vanessa Andreotti's point about soft versus critical global education? Are you convinced by it?

Why can't the Global Citizenship Movement escape the shadow of Western imperialism?
